Exploring the Word

Plenty for Everyone

Mealtime is the best time for just about everyone. People may prefer Italian to Tex-Mex, vegan to omnivore, big portions to small, or dessert to the entrée, but just about everybody I know considers “time to eat” among the happiest words they hear all day. And why not? Food is a pleasure and mealtime is a social event. That’s why food is at the heart of every human celebration. Think Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year’s, and Easter and the holiday table comes to mind. In the same way, there’s no birthday without cake, no Super Bowl without chips, no romance without a candlelight dinner, no Halloween without candy, no Fourth of July without a barbecue. We plan each special day of our year around the food that traditionally accompanies it. Truth is, we plan every day around its requisite meals, even when we bag lunches or grab dinners in the drive-through lane. For Catholic Christians, the Eucharist is the meal around which every Sunday is definitively shaped, and from which the whole week derives its meaning. Our liturgical year winds through feasts and seasons, holy days and saints’ days and ordinary days, too, all of which are centered on a simple meal of bread and wine. It makes perfect sense that the sacramental action that ritually encompasses our lives as Christians is a meal.

Five Loaves and Fishes are All That We Have

Once in a while or once in a lifetime, we may get the opportunity to dine with the swells. Dressed to the nines, we dig into multiple courses of dishes we can hardly pronounce, each bite a work of art we can hardly bear to disturb and yet cannot wait to enjoy. We’ve eaten our poor man’s suppers, too, some out of a greasy fast-food bag or others sitting in a struggling family’s kitchen. Our memory of the meals we have consumed cannot help but be affected by the circumstances and the company in which we partake of them. A night in a fancy restaurant may be tarnished by loneliness or bitter company, while frozen fish sticks on paper plates with someone you love may remain your favorite meal. In the same way, the bread and wine of our Eucharist may look like simple fare, even inadequate to those looking to fill their bellies or staunch their hunger. What’s more, this table is set among people who may be strangers to one another. Compared with the great platters we may set out at other times and among our intimates, the meal we gather to share in the community of faith may seem like a mere ritual. But Jesus took a few redolent fish and some hard bread and satisfied thousands of people with it. What becomes apparent is that the satisfaction doesn’t come simply from the food.

It comes from the total experience—what we might call the blessing—the meal imparts. The blessing might be in the occasion that brings this company together, or in the eyes of the one who looks across the table at you with love. It may be in the hands that serve you, or in the one who picked up the tab. In the case of our Eucharist, all of these blessings are present, and all these elements are true. Loaves and fishes, bread and wine, a roomful of strangers, and the love of Jesus.

Do This in Remembrance of Me

Of all the memorable meals we’ve enjoyed, this one recalls for us the greatest hour of human history, when God’s life and our lives were joined in one eternal reality. What’s more, our Eucharist isn’t simply a commemoration or reenactment but an actual participation in that holy hour. What once was, is now—and will be forever. Scientists tell us that when we remember something, our brains recreate the chemistry of the original event so that we technically “re-live” the experience in our bodies and thoughts. What happens in the action of our Eucharist is more powerful still. By God’s design, our sacrament makes real and vital the presence of Christ and the life of Christ in our midst. “When we eat this bread and drink this cup,” as St. Paul tells us, Christ’s own journey from death into everlasting life becomes ours. The human race once stood before a locked door through which we could not pass. Our participation in this meal identifies us as the people with the key, and freedom of passage. If we understood what this meal represents, we should treat it like all great feasts and rush to claim our seat at the table. We would dance up the aisles, unable to contain our joy at being included in this gracious event. We would dance our way out of the church brimming with the life that has no end.

Applying the Word: We are in a Deserted Place Here

The world can be a lonely place, but parishes centered on Eucharist cannot allow themselves to imitate that spirit. Jesus was unwilling to send people off to find their own provisions; he fed them in groups of 50 and kept the community together. Yet so often, Holy Communion paradoxically becomes “holy isolation” as each person enters into a solitary, personal frame of mind to get his or her sacrament. A few moments of silence or reflective music is welcome in our noisy world, but not at the expense of the spirit of gathering. Eucharist is never a personal covenant between me and God. When we eat this bread and drink this cup, the consequences are always a shared and common life.
